White Birch, also known as Paper Birch, is named due to its thin white bark that often peels in paper-like layers from the trunk. It doesn't burn as hot as other types of Birch, making it one of the less desirable types of Birch firewood. You will find White Birch primarily in the far northern states and Canada.

Birch wood is a popular wood to work with and Pentacryl (or Wood Juice) will stabilize it effectively. Due to the soft bark, we have found that the birch wood absorbs Pentacryl into this area more readily than other types of wood. This extra absorption plus the lighter color, will leave the bark slightly darker.
